Court Grants Injunction Against Greenpeace

Brazilian Court Orders Greenpeace to Suspend Circulation of Erroneous Report Containing False Allegations Against JBS.

JBS SA announces to its shareholders and to the market in general that a Brazilian court today has ordered Greenpeace to immediately suspend the circulation of an erroneous and defamatory report about JBS which it published last week. The NGO will have to withdraw the document from its website and will not be allowed to distribute it or its content in any format, electronic, written or verbal.

Non-compliance with the order will result in a daily fine of R$50,000 (Brazilian Reais) equivalent to £15,500 sterling until the court's orders are carried out.

The injunction, issued by Judge Sergio Divino Carvalho is to be served on representatives of Greenpeace today, 13th June. The court's decision comes less than a week after JBS identified a number of serious flaws in a document published by the NGO.

Last week, Greenpeace acknowledged during interviews with the local press in Brazil that the report issued against JBS contained serious errors. Pushed by members of the Brazilian press, Greenpeace was forced to admit that the information defaming the work of JBS was erroneous.

JBS reaffirms its commitment towards advancing initiatives in the social and environmental field and is always open to dialogue with a view towards building an economically feasible society which is environmentally correct with social justice.
